

Close Your Eyes, The Body

I've been shackled underneath all these lies for the last time
And I'm throwing them aside
There's too much apathy that clouds my mind
Words cannot express the sadness I'm feeling

If this is all we are I'm walking out the door
I want no part of it
There has to be something more
Speaking hope without action can't be the end
I can say, "I love you," it's never enough

Aren't we the ones who walk the narrow road?
Aren't we the voices that come from before the throne?
And when we stand for revolution's sake the world will know, they'll know your name.

It's never been enough
This is the end of all You have become;
open our hearts and let Yourself in

I won't stand for this!
This can't be the body You spoke of!
Because I have forgotten how to love
