The floor barely withstands you
The walls are thankful they're not mirrors
You can barely bear your own presence

Through all this smoke you've lost yourself
Took all that glittered for gold, and you grew old

You went and bleached your character
Tried to undergo rebirth
And you still feel trapped inside yourself
Your pride won't let you ask for help
You can be like this if you want
I don't mind just talk to me
Don't let go, there's a world to see
There's a life to live, there's you and me

A single question now remains
A simple fraction of my pain
I love the room, love the walls
But is there enough for us all?
My veins are hollow they've been bled
All I've had and all I've said
All these questions left unread
All this pain stuck in my head

All of us need to be loved

My feet aren't stable here
But I'm still standing tall
Next to my mistakes
No regrets at all
I am complete, only because
I have you next to me
The world means everything to you
And you mean the world to me

All of us need to be loved
