Inside Out, Horizon

Another day burns away into darkness Another blink of the eye of time I am straining through the blackness Ever searching for a sign The days grow long and the days grow dark And the days grow ever colder The trust that I started with fades as I get older Though the road is hard It seems to me there is no way around this From all youve done for me I know youll never break your promise So here at the end of this day Where the world is shaded in gray I will look to blue horizons and watch for you to come When my hope is tattered and torn When my faith is weathered and worn III look to the blue horizons I am still walking, evading the shadows I am still running that narrow line I would go wherever you would have me go Ever searching for a sign