Marillion, Cathedral Wall

(Hogarth/Kelly/Mosley/Rothery/Trewavas)

Curl up tight into a ball
Curl my body against the soil
Staring up here
At the cathedral wall
I will sleep tonight
Be a baby
Forget it all
Be a baby
Watch the quiet stones
Massive friend
Cathedral wall
I will sleep tonight

A mother to the living A mother to the dead Silent as the moonlight I come to lay my head And I won't know you Anymore

The peckish evening rolls once more Into the ravenous night Of hunger pains That keep our troubled souls awake We are forbidden to explain

A mother to the living A mother to the dead My ghost will drink the moonlight Magic stones My heart and bones

And I won't know you Anymore

She's cold
She knows me
Cathedral wall
She's cold
She shows
I borrow
Keep away
Keep you away my love, my love
And pray I might sleep tonight

The violence of my heartbeat
The violence of the blood
I will sleep with the cathedral
And, one day, you'll give up
And I will love you
But I won't know you
Anymore

My frenzied and exhausted mind Will somehow find a way To leave you for a time Condemned to lieing And lying awake

[These chains are all your own...]
