

Neutral Milk Hotel, Through My Tears

Watch the wind blow your cigarette smoke through my window and out to the sky this message sent, drilled into your heart but now the ink will fade before the night is through my dear where were you when the cracks were forming where were you when it all caved in you were sleeping safe that morning holding insecurities that burrowed underneath your skin and fade away

all alone - another twisted moment's gone that will never pass this way again and through it all i thought there'd be some shred of hope but faith i've found will do you in and all the words that build into a bridge of love between me and you will stumble, crack and fail to fly and now my only one, where have you gone are you another heart that i must sing goodbye my dear

where were you when it all caved in
and fade away
