

The Good Life, Always A Bridesmaid

In pile of unpaid bills
There's a letter sent from Philadelphia
In a familiar hand, she hasn't opened it just yet There's no telling what it says Oh darling please, I'm down on one knee

So why? Can't I be him, that guy in all your dreams?
The one with all those qualities, impossible to achieve That man you thought I'd be So flawless, so honest, that could never be me Well that ain't me

There's some flowers on her desk, Doesn't he know how embarrassed she gets, receiving gifts
She hasn't opened up her card
The bouquet it says it all, that will do with baby's breath the same bouquet she caught on their first date that night he was a king

he flew in town for business and ended up at the wedding they shared life stories, between drinks she loved him so quickly, and left him just the same yeah, he's still the same, he's still the same no, he's nothing new, but he hasn't changed always a bridesmaid, her friends all settled down always a bridesmaid, she dropped her bouquet on the ground they snuck out for a cigarette she said Maybe it's the whiskey sours, but I think this could be it if you ask me, here and now, I think, no I know, I could make those wedding vows, we could sneak off in the night, and I could Be The Bride

I could Be The Bride
Alright, I could Be The Bride
I could Be The Bride

Ba ba ba da da
ba ba ba da da
Ba ba ba da da
ba ba ba da da
Ba ba ba da da
ba ba ba da da
Ba ba ba da da
ba ba ba, ba ba ba