

Tokyo Rose, Before You Burn

What will it take for you to learn, that all your actions are coupled with reactions?
You might not see it now.
You're right to hold your standards high.
But when the others just miss, it is right to dismiss?
They're trying as hard as you.

Won't you cut them a little slack or stand and watch them choke?
What gives you the right to cut them down,
When they're reaching for the same stars as you are?

Tear down your walls.
You're not keeping anyone, from entering your city limits.
The tide is rushing in, as the ocean greets your shores, and you become an island.

What goes around comes back around.
Hope what you put forward is everything you hoped for.
It pays ten to one in time.
Your world revolves around your head.
And when it stops spinning, you'll find that you've been living all alone, nowhere to go.

Should I cut you a little slack or stand and watch you choke?
What gives you the right to cut them down,
When they're reaching for the same stars as you are?

Tear down your walls.
You're not keeping anyone, from entering your city limits.
The tide is rushing in, as the ocean greets your shores, and you become an island.

You'll learn as you live.
You'll get as you give.
Stop to think before you burn your bridges.
It's never too late to redirect fate.
It's in your court.

What will it take for you to learn?
Just stop to think before you burn.